

How to write a summary of an energy storage exhibition

How do you write a brief description of an exhibition?

It is helpful to write a brief description of your exhibition. This description can be used in brochures, on websites, blogs, or other publicity venues and can also appear on a poster. The brief description should only be two or three sentences long, and articulate the main idea of the exhibition and why it is important or interesting.

Why is writing a museum exhibition so hard?

Writing well is hard. Visitors have limited patience and energy for the words we put in our exhibitions. But they will read - if it interests them - if we do it briefly - if we find a way to connect to them. The text in many museum exhibitions is boring. It's often written in haste, without real regard for the visitor. We can do better.

How do you write a text strategy for an exhibition?

All exhibitions should have a Text Strategy. A good Text Strategy can be expressed in one or two pages. 1. Identify the key audiences for the exhibition. 2. Set the Reading Level appropriate to the key audiences. 3. Specify the tone - Does the story warrant a formal, or more playful and conversational tone? 4.

How do you write an exhibition introduction?

Essentially, the introduction should communicate the exhibition's "Big Idea" and not much more. It must be short. It should draw the visitor in. Word Limit: 25 words. An overview of a thematic area (related content and stories). An interpretive panel about a key story or feature. An interpretive label about an object.

How do you write a review for an exhibition?

Exhibitions that they missed. How you write your review depends entirely on the kind of audience you are writing for and what it is you want to communicate about INTRODUCING THE EXHIBITION. Unlike books or films, an exhibition is not necessarily something that readers can read or view unless they happen to be in the particular location where the

How much do visitors read in an exhibition?

There is excellent research about visitors and reading. The longer the text, the less likely it is to be read. The more text used throughout an exhibition, the less of it is likely to be read. On average, visitors spend two seconds reading any piece of text. The most-read texts are about things. The least-read texts are about ideas.
