What are some examples of organizational change announcements?

Organizational change announcements can vary, but here are a few examples: employees can read the announcement and know to whom they should report, or a new hire announcement could create a welcoming environment from the very first day. These announcements may also share information about where to report work-related tasks.

What should you include in a P.S. for a change announcement?

Consider adding a postscript (P.S.) to emphasize critical points or deadlines related to the change. Transparency: Clearly state what is changing, avoiding jargon or vague language. Empathy: Acknowledge feelings and potential concerns. Change can be unsettling, and it is essential to recognize this.

Why is reorganization required?

This change, effective February 6, requires the reorganization of employees in both departments. The consolidation is part of an effort to develop a stronger company structure. In the past, our divisions have become overly divided and specialized. Directors report their employees feeling detached from the rest of the company.
